Old Town Orange

What's unique about Old Towne Orange is that in one square mile exists a remarkable density of vintage buildings that include businesses, homes, churches, schools, Chapman University, a train depot, the Hilbert Museum, packing houses, lofts, and parks. Collectively, homes and buildings are well-maintained and retain their architectural integrity. Most of the area's construction occurred from about 1874 to 1940; more than 50 architectural styles are represented and include Victorian, Craftsman, American Bungalow, Hip Roof Cottage, Provincial Revival, Mediterranean, Prairie, Spanish Colonial Revival, and Classical Revival. Old Towne Orange is a vital, thriving historic community. Even after more than 140 years, it is still the epicenter for residents and the community. Businesses, shops, and restaurants reflect the changing cultures and tastes of the region. Traditions, like the annual Street Fair, have continued since the early 1900s.

The Hilbert Museum

The Hilbert Museum of California includes oils, watercolors, sketches and lithographs of urban and industrial scenes, coastal views, farms, ranches and landscapes of everyday life, and is a significant repository of images of the 20th century by California artists, celebrating the unique artistic and cultural development of the Golden State.

This is the first museum anywhere that is totally dedicated to the display of California Scene and California representational art. The collection shows the changes taking place across California as it grew, starting around 1920 – changes that are still happening and reflected in today's representational art.

In addition, rotating temporary exhibits are scheduled.
